Dr. Walters was a countrie doctor. He lived a few miles from town in a small cottage surrounded by a numbre of greate, olld pecan trees. One morning Dr. Walters was washing some tomatoes he had picked in his vegetable garden. After he finished washing the tomatoes, he placed them in a sawcer on his kitchen table. He was just about to do some other chores, when he thought he saw something moving out of the corner of his eye.

At first Dr. Walters thought it was just the curtan moving in the breeze. But then he looked past the curtain and across the passture. He saw someone coming on a bycycle. The person was still some distense away, but Dr. Walters could tell he was pedaling very quickly. The doctor walked out onto his porch and watched as the man raced up the road.

The man had an urgent mesage. There had been an outbreak of meesles in town. Upon hearing the news, Dr. Walters immediately left his house and went to town to help.
